

What does it mean for leaders to “walk the talk”?

The way crew work onboard, is very much reflective of the way leadership is in the company. “Safety First” may be the largest stencil on board all ships, but the essence of the message is not the size of the characters, but in the commitment of the top management ashore and also on board.

Published 22 April 2020

The information provided in this article is intended for general information only. While every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of the information at the time of publication, no warranty or representation is made regarding its completeness or timeliness. The content in this article does not constitute professional advice, and any reliance on such information is strictly at your own risk. Gard AS, including its affiliated companies, agents and employees, shall not be held liable for any loss, expense, or damage of any kind whatsoever arising from reliance on the information provided, irrespective of whether it is sourced from Gard AS, its shareholders, correspondents, or other contributors.

SMS procedures and policies developed to ensure safety on board the ship can be all encompassing, but their proper implementation would be unlikely if there is a lack of commitment from the highest levels of management.

The ISM Code states in its preamble that “ The cornerstone of good safety management is commitment from the top. In matters of safety and pollution prevention it is the commitment, competence, attitudes and motivation of individuals at all levels that determines the end result”.

Prof Phil Anderson covers “ leadership and management ” in his book ISM Code: A Practical Guide . According to him, demonstration of commitment from the top should be believed by everybody in the company, both ashore and on-board ships. Only then will the department heads, line managers, superintendents, masters, chief engineers, and all the crew be inspired to follow their leaders and commit to safety in their day-to-day work. “Walk the talk” is the leader’s ability to understand the consequences of their words, their actions or inactions, and their intentions.

More information

Loss prevention poster: Walk the talk

The information provided in this article is intended for general information only. While every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of the information at the time of publication, no warranty or representation is made regarding its completeness or timeliness. The content in this article does not constitute professional advice, and any reliance on such information is strictly at your own risk. Gard AS, including its affiliated companies, agents and employees, shall not be held liable for any loss, expense, or damage of any kind whatsoever arising from reliance on the information provided, irrespective of whether it is sourced from Gard AS, its shareholders, correspondents, or other contributors.